Key Insights

- The number of emails sent is similar throughout all campaigns.
- New Product Launch emails have a higher chance of being opened.
- There is no relationship between open rate and CTR, That would imply that open rate alone isn't a strong predictor of CTR.
- Flash sale-based campaigns have a higher chance of influencing the client to take action.
- Customer Appreciation-based campaigns are better at making clients less likely to unsubscribe.
- Exclusive Offers based campaigns don't necessarily influence your clients.
- There is no correlation between Conversion Rate and revenue, That would imply that conversion rate alone isn't a strong predictor of revenue.

recommendations

The lack of correlation between open and CTR suggests that subject lines may be successful at achieving opens but the body of the email is not sufficient to inspire clicks. Maybe the CTAs are not quality or the content is irrelevant upon opening.

Possible angles to consider: customer lifetime value, average order value, segmentation, personalization, and timing.

As conversion rates aren't a direct indicator of revenue, perhaps price points or product categories within successful conversion campaigns aren't most profitable.

Encouraging upselling or cross-selling can help. For high unsubscribe campaigns like Holiday Discounts, reducing frequency or targeting more narrowly may help with retention.

For Exclusive Offers, which have low revenue, perhaps the offers aren't perceived as being of great value. exclusivity or combining with limited-time offers could increase their effectiveness.
